Instead of creating a separate WDC for each set of questions, I can now create a single WDC that allows the end user to join tables in the same way they would do if they were connecting to a relational database. My WDC will return the following tables for you: player information: includes around 492 records (one for each player in the league) and provides information such as the player name, news, photo, position, and stats from the current season. team information: includes 20 records (one for each team in the league) and provides information such as the team name, number of wins / losses / draws, position, strength, and form of each team. fixture information: includes 380 records (one for each fixture in the season) and provides information such as the home and away teams (joins to team information using `teamid`), score, fixture date/time, and minutes played. history past season information: includes around 1782 records (one for each historical season that every player in the league has played in) and provides information such as the `playerid` (joins to player information table), season name, and stats from previous seasons. Note that this table takes around 2 minutes to load as calls a separate endpoint for each player in the league. The WDC is available here (you will need to be running Tableau v10.0 or later): the code is on github here: look at how multi table support works. For example, the following is what I used to track activity about Tableau during our customer conference: `twitterStream.filter(track=['tableau', '#tableau', '#data15'])` Run the python script and start collecting your data (note that you will need to install tweepy, textblob, and pycopy2). Finally, connect Tableau Desktop to your Postgres database and begin building your viz! tableau twitter streaming api search api tableau tableau data15 3 notes Open in app Facebook Tweet Reddit Mail Embed Permalink UK Street Crimes Web Data Connector This Web Data Connector gets data from which provides street-level crime data for the UK. I would really prefer to get the RTU with the app-scoped IDs - but if this is not possible, your solution will help me a lot! I would vote this up if I could.
